HELPS REMOVE SUSPECTED SEX OFFENDER FROM THE STREETS OF TAMPA

A man suspected of sexually assaulting a young girl in Tampa, Florida is apprehended by officers quickly with the help of Street Smart™, which gives officers real-time access to critical data while in the field.

After police met with the victim and gathered a description of the incident and the assailant, investigators logged into Street Smart and activated the sex offender layer map view in the neighborhood where the offense took place. Because there were a few sexual offenders registered in the nearby area, it was fairly easy for officers to match the description of the suspect to an offender living nearby.

The officers located the suspect and questioned him about his potential involvement in the incident reported by the young girl. When asked about his recent activities and whereabouts, the suspect admitted his involvement and was arrested and charged accordingly.

With the help of the Street Smart map viewer, officers were able to easily and quickly view sex offender residences in order to quickly narrow down a list of potential suspects.

The result was an arrest made by the responding officers. This arrest saved the agency time by not having to involve a detective and gave the family a much faster resolution to the incident.

This is one example of how Street Smart is used by law enforcement agencies to access critical real-time data in the field or at the station in order to locate a suspect or solve an investigation quickly.
